REACTION + THOUGHTS on the King VERDICT + RIOTS

This tract's sole purpose is to vent my own frustrations. Unfortunately for you I have enough disposable income to produce and distribute these. Please note I am not affiliated with any organization and these are simply my personal reactions and opinions, I have no hidden agenda or platform other than clear independent thinking and the total complete dismantling of our society. We need to come together and expose the myth that is America, if for no other reason than to get to blow shit up. Mass media on a small scale, freedom of press is the responsibility of all those who own one.

In the wake of the handing down of blind justice in the trial of the officers accused of excessively beating one Rodney King, the streets exploded at long last. Born of frustration and feelings of neglect, the spontaneous political expression lead not to revolution but to mindless burning and greedy looting. What else would Americans do anyway? We are not socialized into political monades or grassroot organizations, there are only two political cells in this nation and they are completely ignored by the brooding masses. We (with exception of the bumbling slogan toting Communists) don't speak highly of change or revolution. We seem not to understand it or want it. Instead of taking the opportunity to blow up a police station or storm city hall to throw the bastards out, we ran to the local Dairy Mart and Shopping Center, consumers one and all. Taking for the sake of taking, we have been trained well. We are constantly bombarded with images of things we supposedly can not live without. Items, products, and merchandise that sparkles and beckons us to consume; this of course seems harmless enough, yet it is insidious when viewed in a riotous context. We would rather loot a store for a few packs of frozen peas or a big Yellow Crayon change bank, than fight for a definite socio-political cause. We are lulled into submission, supplanting conviction of thought for convenience of product. We get caught up in the frivolous trivialities of buying and owning, the consumer world is not one in which we consume but rather are consumed. We care more about owning the new Nike Air Juicer than we do about the BCCI scandal or Oliver North's subversion of the Constitution. Where were the riots when that murderous nazi got off scott free? We allow our opinion to be manipulated and entangled in things of absolutely no consequence. If we could show so much interest and knowledge about the political world as we do about the fashion world then Americans would truly be dangerous. As it stands we are nothing more than over-extended shoppers, who given the opportunity to take shit for free will break windows and shoot one another.

Reaction has been pouring in, people have taken this opportunity to remind us of their personal political agendas, there is not a

'Court system has worked,' Bush says

WASHINGTON

President Bush last night appealed "for calm and reason" following the acquittal of white Los Angeles police officers in the videotaped beating of a black motorist.

"The only thing I would say about that . . . is an appeal for calm and reason in the community," Bush told reporters at a state dinner for visiting German President Richard von Weizsacker.

"The court system has worked. What's needed now is calm, respect for the law. Let the appeals process take place," he said.

"I think citizens of good will are of the same (view)," Bush added.

defense) and submited, the 53 blows would have been reduced to a few standard warning taps. Nonetheless, Mr King was the one who dictated the way he was treated. The comparison to a rape defense is striking, she was flirting, she was dressed like a slut, she was asking for it; how could there have been any doubt in any of your minds that Mr King was asking for it?

Watching Tom Brokow tonight as he calmly reported how the two contenders for the Presidential Throne have reacted to this "incident," I got very suspicious. Mr Bush has called for a return to "Law and Order (seig heil)", Mr Quayle has condemned Mr Johnson's Great Society forgetting that for the last 28 years or so the White House has been occupied by his own party and not Mr Johnson. I was surprised he didn't jump on the bandwagon and condemn Mr Roosevelt's New Deal also. But I digress again, my point here is that keeping in mind the devious and covert nature of the present administration coupled with my suspicious mind - I can't rule out conspiracy. Mr Bush is facing a nation that is crippled economically and whose domestic problems he has ignored, he has no agenda or sound platform on which to stand. He has no idea, he needed a diversion, something that would polarize the nation. Some incident that would show that Mr Bush is a man of direct action, looking out for the family values and Chirstian morals and all that double talk which translates into capitalization on White Fear. The code words will abound in the next few weeks as Mr Bush tries to draw support by drumming up and playing upon white suspicion and institutional racism. Law and Order, my friends, means the ending of ghetto problems through more imprisonment, stronger police who hit harder, and possibly the abolition of ALL civil rights for "criminals" (read non-whites). The FBI infiltrated and dismantled the Black Panthers quite effectively not to mention the numerous CIA civil agitation/counter-revolutionary/ paramilitary groups that are effectively operating in other nations as I write this, is it so absurd to think that the FBI might have agitated or precipitated these riots if not the actual outcome of the trial? The LAPD's reaction was incredibly slow and the Federal Troops were not mobilized until late into the second day of the riots. We will see how much attention this all brings from the Bush Re-election Campaign, but remember the Willie Horton Ads were not sanctioned and they were not racial in their intent. Believe that? Then re-elect Mr George Herbert Walker Bush III.

Not the Bush thing to do. He moved through L.A. with Jack Kemp, the hyperkinetic housing and urban development secretary, at his side. But, unlike Kemp, Bush is no "bleeding-heart conservative." He doesn't believe that government—even supply-side government—can do much to solve social ills. Family, church and local schools are his answers. And Bush was reluctant to stray too far from the traditional Republican reaction to urban violence. Since the Harlem riots in 1964, GOP presidential candidates have been law-and-order men above all, mining fear in the suburbs for votes against the "Them" of the cities. In Los Angeles, the presi-

He said he would take his case "every chance I get to black Americans and say, 'Hey, listen, we got a good record on civil rights, and we're going to continue it.'"

In a written statement after the violence broke out, Bush said the verdict "has left us all with a deep sense of personal frustration and anguish." But his later, harsh, on-camera words did not include that note of personal pain. He said Americans must "maintain a respect for the legal system and a demand for law and order."
